

The challenge: To find the highest quality equipment to serve worshippers and church users.
The solution: A new iPad wireless controlled sound system with induction loop systems.
The benefits: Better sound quality for their large congregation and community church users.

Community facilities such as churches often find that they need to improve access for people with disabilities, either as a response to legislation or as a means of widening participation. For Holy Trinity Church, they required a high quality system due to the total restoration of the church building.

“We are very pleased with the new system and the service we received. We would definitely recommend Gordon Morris Ltd.”

Holy Trinity Church is a Grade 1 listed medieval parish church seating about 400. The church holds regular services and is on a journey to expand as a church community. In order to preserve the building and take the opportunity to build on its role in the centre of the town, Holy Trinity is moving to create a vibrant, active space that will offer a modern, “open door” approach to the whole community of Bradford-on-Avon.

many of whom are hard of hearing, so the system was a good test for their needs. As Joanna comments, “the previous sound system was always the cause of complaints!” Joanna is pleased with their choice of the most expensive microphones to achieve perfect sound. “In our experience poor microphones (especially tie-clip) can let down an otherwise good system”.

Convenience and clarity

The Revd Canon Joanna Abecassis contacted Gordon Morris Ltd. in response to a major re-ordering building project. The inside of the church was stripped right down to the original stonework, so an entirely new sound system was required. She has a large congregation,
